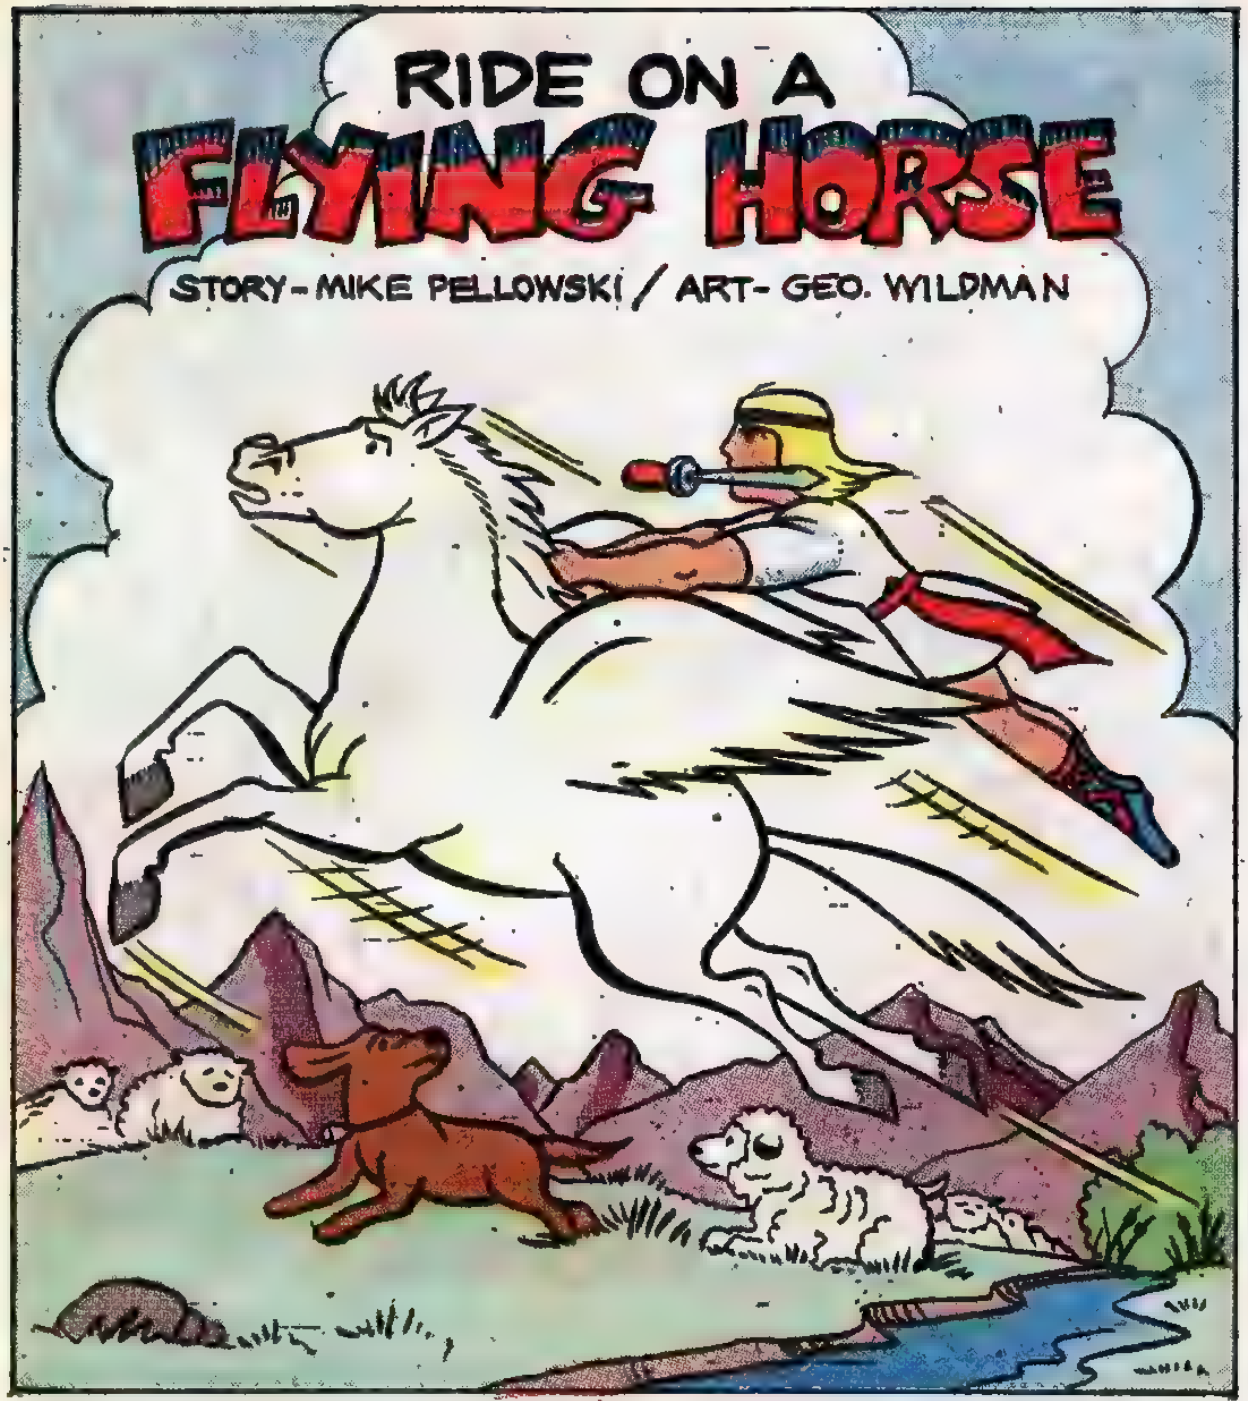
RIDE ON A FLYING HORSE

STORY - MIKE PELLOWSKI / ART - GEO. WILDMAN



Dimitri and his dog, Argo, were tired. The shepherd boy had kept his flock of sheep on the move all day. It was difficult to find a meadow where his sheep could graze safely. The mountains and valleys of Greece in the year 600 A.D. were extremely dangerous. The wilderness wasn't a safe place for man nor beast. There were horrible monsters, like a nine-headed serpent called the Hydra, living in the hills of ancient Greece. There were also wild beasts, wolves and half-human creatures roaming the valleys looking for helpless victims to prey upon.

It was a dangerous, difficult and endless job to protect and care for a flock of sheep. Dimitri was an orphan. His faithful dog, Argo, was like a brother to the boy. They shared their meals. They shared the work. They shared the dangers of living alone in the wild. They fought side by side whenever the need arose.

They had searched all day for a meadow with enough grass to feed the hungry flock. The flock could never spend too much time in any one place. It was too dangerous and besides that there was never enough grass. There was always another hillside or valley to be explored in order to keep the sheeps' bellies full. Argo's barking drove the sheep down a hillside into a lush valley. The valley was a hidden paradise in the wilderness. It had carpet-like grass and a sparkling-clear, babbling brook. There were fruit trees and ripened grapes hanging from wild vines. The valley was protected on two sides by high mountain ridges.

"We will be safe here." said Dimitri. Argo laid down beside him. Dimitri stroked the head of his hard working dog. Argo licked his Master's hand. The two brothers in adventure watched their flock grazing peacefully. Suddenly, Dimitri heard the flapping of giant wings. The boy and his dog looked up at the setting sun.

They saw an amazing sight. A flying, white horse with large wings was gliding towards the meadow where they were resting. Dimitri pointed at the beautiful horse. "It's Pegasus, the flying steed of the gods." announced Dimitri. "He must live in this beautiful valley." added the shepherd lad. Dimitri and Argo watched as Pegasus landed near the brook. Pegasus drank from a clear pool and then walked over to the grove of fruit trees.

"I wish I could ride on Pegasus." said Dimitri. "He is so intelligent and swift that I wouldn't even get close to him. I'd never catch him." said the boy. Dimitri's hand accidentally touched the hilt of the magic Sword of Aries. The wondrous blade was stuck in his belt. Aries had given Dimitri the sword as a reward after the boy had helped the wounded war god.

Whenever Dimitri drew the sword from its scabbard he grew into a super being with the strength and speed of Hercules and the skill and agility of Aries. "Maybe I can get a ride." said Dimitri. He pulled the sword from its sheath. He felt a tingling sensation throughout his body. He felt his bones stretching and his muscles growing. Soon, he was no longer a boy. He was a warrior with god-like powers.

He held the sword between his teeth and quietly crept up on the winged horse. The horse sniffed the air. Dimitri's scent reached Pegasus' nostrils. The alarmed, flying horse began to gallop away. Dimitri jumped onto his feet and chased the winged horse. Pegasus began to beat his wings as he ran. Dimitri grabbed the horse's mane just as Pegasus' hoofs were lifted off the ground. Dimitri held on using all of his Herculean strength.

Pegasus was already high in the air. If Dimitri let go he would fall to his death. He strained his muscles and pulled himself onto the horse's back. Pegasus knew he had been conquered. Dimitri guided Pegasus' flight by tugging on the horse's mane. Dimitri circled a distant mountain top and then returned to the valley. Dimitri waved his magic sword at Argo as Pegasus flew past the flock. The winged horse landed near the brook once again.

Dimitri climbed down. "You're free to go. Thanks for the thrilling ride." said Dimitri. He released the horse's mane. He put the magic sword of Aries back into its scabbard. Dimitri immediately returned to his shepherd's body. He watched in awe as Pegasus flew off towards the moon and Olympus. Argo rushed to his Master's side. Dimitri petted his dog. The twosome saw Pegasus' silhouette slowly disappear over the horizon.
